Title
Effects of gamma irradiation on morphological and anatomical changes in Porang (Amorphophallus muelleri Blume)

Abstract

Porang is agricultural plant that become important in the recent years. However, harnessing them through traditional genetic breeding is time-consuming and expensive. Inducing mutagenesis may be a short-time option for its genetic improvement. Therefore, the aim of this is to determine the effect of gamma irradiation in the morphological and anatomical changes of Porang. This research used completely randomized design (CRD) consisted of 6 levels of radiation including 0 Gray, 2 Gray, 4 Gray, 6 Gray, 8 Gray and 10 Gray. Porang height, total shoot and leaves, width and length of leaves, stomatal and calcium oxalate density were characterized after irradiation. Quantitative data were analyzed by using Anova one way and duncan on 5% significance level. Level irradiation of 2 Gray affected the number of shoots and leaves, plant height, width and length of leaves, while level irradiation of 6 Gray increased the number and density of stomata, and decreased the density of calcium oxalate. Gamma radiation has succeeded in increasing the agricultural value of porang and producing porang with higher genetic diversity than wildtypes
